

OLATUNDE VICTOR ABIOLA

THE BRAND CLARITY STARTER KIT

Turn what you do into a brand people understand — then turn that clarity into better messaging and content.

POSITIONING

MESSAGING

CONTENT

A practical workbook for founders, creators and ambitious small brands.

Your brand is not a logo.

It is the meaning people take away when they encounter you.

This workbook is designed to help you make the decisions underneath your brand: who you are for, what problem you solve, why you are different, what you should say, how you should sound and what your content should repeatedly reinforce.

THE GOAL

Clarity before creativity. Before you create another post, redesign another logo or ask for another content calendar, get clear enough that your brand decisions start becoming easier.

By the end, you should have:

- ☐ A clear description of your ideal audience
- ☐ A sharper problem and outcome
- ☐ A positioning statement
- ☐ A clear point of difference
- ☐ A simple brand message
- ☐ A usable brand voice
- ☐ 3-5 content pillars
- ☐ 10 immediate content ideas
- ☐ A one-page brand clarity cheat sheet

How to use this workbook

Don't rush to fill every box. The value is in the decisions.

1. Work alone first. Your first answers should come from what you know about your business, not what you think sounds impressive.
2. Be specific. Replace words like 'everyone', 'quality', 'innovative' and 'excellent' with concrete descriptions.
3. Look for tension. If your answers contradict each other, stop. That contradiction is useful.
4. Keep the language human. The final version should sound like something a real customer could understand.
5. Revisit it. Your first version is a working hypothesis, not a prison.

A USEFUL RULE

If your brand strategy sounds impressive but you cannot turn it into a sentence a customer understands, you are not finished.

01 / The Clarity Reset

Start with the business underneath the branding.

Before we touch positioning, answer these without trying to sound clever.

What do you actually sell?

What does the customer actually get from buying it?

What changes for the customer after they choose you?

The problem beneath the product

People buy solutions to problems, not descriptions of products.

What problem exists before your customer buys?

What is frustrating, expensive, slow, confusing, risky or emotionally difficult about that problem?

What happens if the problem stays unsolved?

Who is this really for?

A broad audience feels safe. A specific audience gives your message somewhere to land.

Describe your best-fit customer as a real person or business, not a demographic category.

They are...

They are trying to...

They are frustrated by...

They already tried...

L / Listener

The person you are trying to move should be visible in your messaging.

Complete these sentences in your customer's language.

“I wish someone would just...”

“The hardest part about this is...”

“I am tired of...”

“I would happily pay for...”

“I would trust a brand that...”

C / Context

Meaning changes depending on the category, moment and alternatives around you.

Where does your customer encounter this problem?

What are they comparing you against?

What assumptions already exist about your category?

What has changed in the market or customer behaviour that makes your offer relevant now?

The competitive picture

You do not need to be completely different. You need to be meaningfully distinguishable.

List 3-5 alternatives your customer could choose.

Alternative	What they promise	Why customers choose them	What they leave open

E / Edge

Your difference becomes useful when a customer can recognise it.

Complete these prompts:

We do _____ differently.

Most alternatives focus on _____. We focus on _____.

The belief behind our approach is _____.

A customer should remember us for _____.

AVOID THIS TRAP

“Quality”, “customer service”, “innovation”, “affordable” and “passion” are not automatically differentiators. They only become useful when you can explain how you deliver them differently.

A / Assertion

Say the thing you want the market to remember.

Your assertion is the strongest, clearest idea you want associated with your brand.

We believe...

We exist to...

We want to be known for...

The one sentence we want people to repeat about us is...

The CLEAR framework

Use this as your diagnostic before you create more content.

C	Context What is happening around the customer, category and alternatives?
L	Listener Who needs to hear this, and what do they already believe or want?
E	Edge What makes your approach meaningfully distinguishable?
A	Assertion What is the central idea you want the brand to own?
R	Reinforcement How will your content, proof, product and experience repeat the idea?

THE TEST

If your content can change topic every day without changing what people understand about your brand, you may be creating content without reinforcement.

Your positioning statement

Use this as a thinking tool first. Polish it later.

FORMULA

We help [specific audience] achieve [valuable outcome] through [distinct approach], so they can [meaningful result].

Draft 1

Draft 2

Draft 3 — simplest version

Pressure-test the positioning

A good statement should create decisions, not just sound good.

- ☐ It names a recognisable audience.
- ☐ It describes an outcome people actually care about.
- ☐ It avoids empty adjectives.
- ☐ It gives me a reason to choose this brand.
- ☐ It is specific enough to guide content.
- ☐ It is broad enough to remain useful as the business grows.
- ☐ I could explain it to someone in 10 seconds.
- ☐ A competitor could not copy it without changing what they actually do.

The weakest part of my positioning is...

The strongest part is...

Turn positioning into a message

Your strategy should become language people can actually use.

One-line explanation	Customer-facing promise
What you do in one sentence without jargon.	The practical outcome the customer should expect.

One-line explanation

Customer-facing promise

Why choose us?

What we want to be known for?

Build your bio

A bio should quickly answer who you help, what you help them do and why they should care.

Formula: Who I help + what I help them achieve + proof/edge + next step

Instagram bio

LinkedIn headline

Short professional introduction

Your brand voice

Voice is not a list of adjectives. It is a repeatable way of communicating.

Choose three qualities that should consistently describe your voice.

1.

2.

3.

What should your brand never sound like?

What words or phrases should you use repeatedly?

Make the voice observable

The fastest way to define tone is to show it.

Situation	Too generic	Our version
Launching	We are excited to announce our new product.
Selling	Our product is high quality and affordable.
Educating	Here are five tips to improve your strategy.
Apologising	We apologise for any inconvenience caused.
Celebrating	We are thrilled to hit this milestone.

Write one example in your own voice for each situation.

Your content pillars

Content becomes easier when you know the ideas you are repeatedly trying to own.

Choose 3-5 pillars. Each should connect to your positioning.

Pillar 1

Why this pillar matters to the brand:

Pillar 2

Why this pillar matters to the brand:

Pillar 3

Why this pillar matters to the brand:

Pillar 4

Why this pillar matters to the brand:

Pillar 5

Why this pillar matters to the brand:

The content clarity matrix

Use four jobs to prevent your feed becoming one long sales pitch.

EDUCATE	PROVE
Teach something useful. Explain a problem. Give a framework.	Show evidence. Case studies. Results. Process. Specific examples.
CONNECT	SELL
Stories, beliefs, observations and behind-the-scenes thinking.	Make the offer clear. Explain value. Handle objections. Ask for action.

50 content hooks

Use these as starting points, then make them specific to your audience.

- Your brand isn't boring. It's unclear.
- 3 signs your brand is trying to talk to everyone.
- Your customers shouldn't need a five-minute explanation.
- Stop saying [generic phrase]. Say this instead.
- Why your competitor sounds more memorable than you.
- Before you create another post, answer these 5 questions.
- Here's how I'd position a brand in 15 minutes.
- Your content pillars should come from your positioning.
- Why being 'professional' can make your brand forgettable.
- If your audience keeps asking what you do, read this.
- 3 words that make a brand sound generic.
- The easiest positioning exercise I know.
- Here's the question I ask before writing any content.
- Your customer doesn't care about your process — until you connect it to their outcome.
- What your competitors are teaching your customers to expect.
- The most underrated part of brand strategy.
- Your audience isn't confused. Your message is.
- One positioning sentence → ten content ideas.
- Why consistency is more than using the same colours.
- How I would audit a homepage in 10 minutes.
- Stop trying to sound like a big company.
- The difference between a feature and a reason to buy.
- If your content could belong to your competitor, change it.
- One belief can become an entire content pillar.
- Brand clarity is reducing uncertainty.
- More content won't fix unclear positioning.
- If I took over your brand tomorrow, this is what I'd fix first.
- The biggest mistake I see brands make with their messaging.
- Your logo is not your differentiation.
- The real reason your content feels random.
- Your bio is probably describing you, not your customer.
- One sentence can change how people understand your business.
- Views are not the same thing as clarity.
- The difference between a tagline and a positioning statement.
- Your product isn't the story. The change it creates is.
- How to turn a boring feature into a useful message.
- Your brand needs a point of view, not another template.
- One thing I would remove from most brand bios.
- The difference between being different and being meaningful.
- Don't create a content calendar before doing this.
- How to know whether your niche is too broad.
- What happens when a brand tries to say everything.
- The fastest way to find your brand's edge.
- Your brand voice should survive without you.
- The content mistake that makes smart brands look ordinary.
- Small brands can have sharper positioning than big brands.
- Your brand promise should make a decision easier.
- How to turn customer objections into content.
- What your brand should repeat until people remember it.
- Before you ask for more followers, ask this.

Turn one idea into ten pieces of content

This keeps you from reinventing your strategy every day.

Your core idea:

Explain it simply

Challenge a common belief

Show an example

Tell a story

Show proof

Give a checklist

Answer an objection

Compare two approaches

Give a framework

Make an offer

20 AI prompts for clearer brand work

Use AI to accelerate thinking — not to outsource your judgement.

- 01 Act as a brand strategist. Based on this business description, identify the clearest customer problem, desired outcome and point of difference.
- 02 Rewrite this positioning statement in five versions: direct, premium, conversational, bold and minimalist.
- 03 Challenge this positioning. What is vague, generic, unbelievable or internally contradictory?
- 04 Act as a skeptical customer. What would make you ignore this brand?
- 05 Turn this customer pain point into 10 content angles without making them repetitive.
- 06 Give me 10 ways to explain this product without using industry jargon.
- 07 Find the strongest customer outcome hidden inside these product features.
- 08 Compare this brand's message with these three competitors and identify whitespace.
- 09 Create five brand promises based on this positioning. Avoid clichés.
- 10 Turn this positioning into an Instagram bio under 150 characters.
- 11 Turn this positioning into a LinkedIn headline.
- 12 Create a brand voice guide from these three adjectives and five sample sentences.
- 13 Rewrite this caption so it sounds human, specific and confident rather than corporate.
- 14 Create 10 objection-handling posts based on these customer concerns.
- 15 Turn this case study into three educational posts, two proof posts and one sales post.
- 16 Find the most useful tension or contrarian insight in this idea.
- 17 Build a content pillar from this belief and give me 10 subtopics.
- 18 Audit this homepage headline for clarity, specificity and relevance.
- 19 Reduce this message until a busy customer can understand it in one breath.
- 20 Use the CLEAR framework to diagnose this brand: Context, Listener, Edge, Assertion, Reinforcement.

30-day content planner

Plan around ideas, not arbitrary posting volume.

Day	Content job	Idea / hook	CTA
1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25

26
27
28
29
30

Your one-page brand cheat sheet

Complete this last. It becomes your reference for content, design and sales.

WHO WE HELP

The audience we are most useful to...

THE PROBLEM

The problem we solve...

THE OUTCOME

The change customers get...

OUR EDGE

What we do differently...

OUR ASSERTION

The idea we want to own...

OUR VOICE

Three words that describe how we sound...

OUR CONTENT

The ideas we repeatedly talk about...

OUR CTA

The action we want people to take...

The final clarity audit

Read your answers as if you were a stranger encountering the brand for the first time.

- ☐ I can explain what we do in one sentence.
- ☐ I know exactly who the message is for.
- ☐ The customer problem is concrete.
- ☐ The desired outcome is meaningful.
- ☐ Our difference is more than 'quality' or 'service'.
- ☐ Our assertion gives the brand a point of view.
- ☐ Our voice is visible in actual language.
- ☐ Our content pillars reinforce our positioning.
- ☐ I know what to say when selling.
- ☐ I know what to say when educating.
- ☐ I know what proof to show.
- ☐ Someone else could use this document and still sound like our brand.

IF YOU ARE STILL UNCLEAR

Do not add more. Remove. Simplify. Choose. A clear brand is often the result of making fewer, stronger decisions.

Your next 7 days

Clarity only becomes valuable when it changes what you do.

DAY 1

Rewrite your one-line explanation.

DAY 2

Rewrite your bio and profile headline.

DAY 3

Choose your 3-5 content pillars.

DAY 4

Create one educational post.

DAY 5

Create one proof or case-study post.

DAY 6

Create one direct sales post.

DAY 7

Review what felt clearest and strongest.

When you need a second pair of eyes

A workbook can give you clarity. Sometimes you need someone to challenge the thinking with you.

If you have worked through the kit and still feel that your positioning, messaging or content isn't quite connecting, the next step is a strategic review.

BRAND CLARITY AUDIT

A focused strategic review of your positioning, messaging, content and brand voice.

You get clear recommendations, rewritten examples and a strategic walkthrough designed to help you stop guessing and start communicating with intention.

The principle stays the same:

Context. Listener. Edge. Assertion. Reinforcement.

The goal isn't to make your brand sound clever. It is to make it easier for the right people to understand, remember and choose you.

CLARITY BEFORE CREATIVITY.

OLATUNDE VICTOR ABIOLA

Brand & Content Strategist